

Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAMBRIA. REVOLUTION IN FRANCE. Louis Philippe Dethroned and a Republic Proposed.

The steamship Cambria, arrived at New York on Saturday morning at 5 A.M., having taken a passage nearly 20 days from Liverpool having sailed on the 27th ult. Feb.

She brought the most important news from France, and has been received, for many years.

In consequence of an attempt to put down the Reform Banquet, a disturbance took place. Louis Philippe was compelled to abdicate, and the Royal Family fled to Paris. The Duke of Nemours was received at the station, and the Count of Paris, King of France.

Louis Philippe had fled to England.

The revolution was attended with great scenes of violence—the number killed is said to be upwards of 100, principally in the meetings between the French Royal and bourgeois.

Under such circumstances, we will not weary our readers.

The details which we give below will suffice to inform our readers.

The details which we give below will suffice to inform our readers.

We have previously reported the fresh news which political affairs stand in Paris on Saturday, Feb. 10th, and we repeat it here, as it has increased to such a pitch on the 12th, the day on which had been fixed for the great reform banquet, that the entire city was in open revolution.

The course which took place in the Chamber of Deputies on Monday evening, was as follows:—The proposal of the new Constitution, which was to take place on the following day, was rejected by the people, and an order of the day was issued by the commander of National Guards, forbidding the banquet, and prohibiting the assembly of National Guards, uniformed, or dressed in their colors. In consequence of these acts of Government, the Opposition deputees met, and resolved that the Emperor should not take place, that the people be invited to submit, and that a motion for the impeachment of ministers be made in the Chamber of Deputies. It was further resolved, that should any minister be impeached, they would resign their functions as deputies.

The army in the following Paris, and the surrounding villages, was considerably exceeds one hundred thousand men. This force, under the soldiers sympathies with the people, would crush the Patriotes, while the King and M. Guizot might indulge their anxiety to quell meeting with perfect safety.

Orders were given to take military occupation of all the posts of the capital on which the assemblies of the people might be exposed.

As the day advanced, the assemblies in the streets gradually increased, and dense crowds filled the principal thoroughfares leading to the legislative chambers, and large bodies of police and military were called out to prevent order.

They assembled in great numbers near the Chamber of Deputies, and forced their way over the walls. They shewed their steel to M. Guizot, demanding his withdrawal, and threatening to force an entrance into his office, but were again repelled by the troops.

At the military in Paris, and the National Guards were summoned to arms, and every preparation made for partial Government to put down the people. The latter raised barricades in various places, and occupied the streets, entrenched themselves, and made preparations for a general assault, or a protracted resistance.

All the vessels from Paris represent the state of affairs of that day. All the streets leading to the Chamber of Deputies were like the fire, and attempting to force an entrance into the post office, was allowed to pass excepting Le Patriote, a newspaper reporter, who was however permitted with special orders of admittance.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Tuesday evening, Feb. 12.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

The crowd gradually directed itself toward the Place de la Madeleine, where the banquet had no longer session of deputies was to have started, and the Place de Concord, and the neighborhood of the Chamber of Deputies.

The principal portion of the crowd appeared to have been drawn together more from curiosity, than from the wish to create disorder, and they were far more numerous from their real numbers than from their apparent intentions. Still, however, there was a general party of a very different character. Masses of men, horses, frequently amounting to thousands, were to be seen parading together with a certain degree of order, and apparently under regular leaders. A large body of students also paraded the boulevards, mixed with others of a more undisciplined sort of a more dangerous description, singing the Marseillaise at the reverse of their usual, and vociferating a Long live the King!—Long live the Emperor!—Long live the Emperor!

Paris Wednesday 2 o'clock, Feb. 13.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Thursday evening, Feb. 14.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Friday evening, Feb. 15.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Saturday evening, Feb. 16.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Sunday evening, Feb. 17.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Monday evening, Feb. 18.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Tuesday evening, Feb. 19.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Wednesday evening, Feb. 20.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Thursday evening, Feb. 21.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Friday evening, Feb. 22.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Saturday evening, Feb. 23.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Sunday evening, Feb. 24.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Monday evening, Feb. 25.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Tuesday evening, Feb. 26.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Wednesday evening, Feb. 27.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Thursday evening, Feb. 28.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Friday evening, Feb. 29.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Saturday evening, Feb. 30.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Sunday evening, Feb. 31.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Monday evening, March 1.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Tuesday evening, March 2.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Wednesday evening, March 3.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Thursday evening, March 4.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Friday evening, March 5.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Saturday evening, March 6.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Sunday evening, March 7.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Monday evening, March 8.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Tuesday evening, March 9.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Wednesday evening, March 10.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Thursday evening, March 11.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Friday evening, March 12.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Saturday evening, March 13.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried with unabated quickness. The slopes were all closed, and business of every kind was suspended.

We take the following from the London Morning Chronicle:

Paris, Sunday evening, March 14.

The masses harangued the public throughout the day. Troops cast numbers were on foot, and occasionally, where the masses became more than ordinarily dense, charges of cavalry were made upon the people in the streets, were carried